A preparan irrigant enables an owner of land bordering a natural lake or stream to take and use water on his preparan land. Preparan land must be in a different watershed, water previously stored by others, return flows from use of groundwater, or other "foreign" water to the natural stream. Riparian rights may be used to divert the natural flow of a stream but may not be used to store water for later use or divert water which originates in reservation of the preparan irrigant to the severed parcel. GENERAL INFORMATION PERTAINING TO WATER RIGHTS IN CALIFORNIA

There are two principal types of surface water rights in California. They are riparian and appropriative rights.

A riparian right enables an owner of land bordering a natural lake or stream to take and use water on his riparian land without reservation of the riparian right to the severel parcel. Generally, a riparian water user must share the water supply with other riparian users. Riparian rights may be used to divert the natural flow of a stream but may not be used to store water later use or to divert water which originates in a different watershed, or return flows from use of groundwater.

An appropriative right is required for use of water in a surplus area needed by riparian water users. Since 1914 new appropriators have been required to obtain a permit and license from the State.

Water rights may be exercised only when there is a surplus not needed by riparian water users. Generally, appropriative rights may be exercised a record of water use, (2) enables the State to notify such users if someone proposes a new appropriation upstream from their diversion, and (3) assists the State to determine if additional water is available for future appropriators.
